

Planting Our Runner Beans

Our next stage of Glorious Gardening, for our Seeds to Supper adventure was to plant runner beans. We are doing this in recycled old egg trays as when the beans grow, we can plant them straight into the Harrier Hub, continuing our sustainability mission.

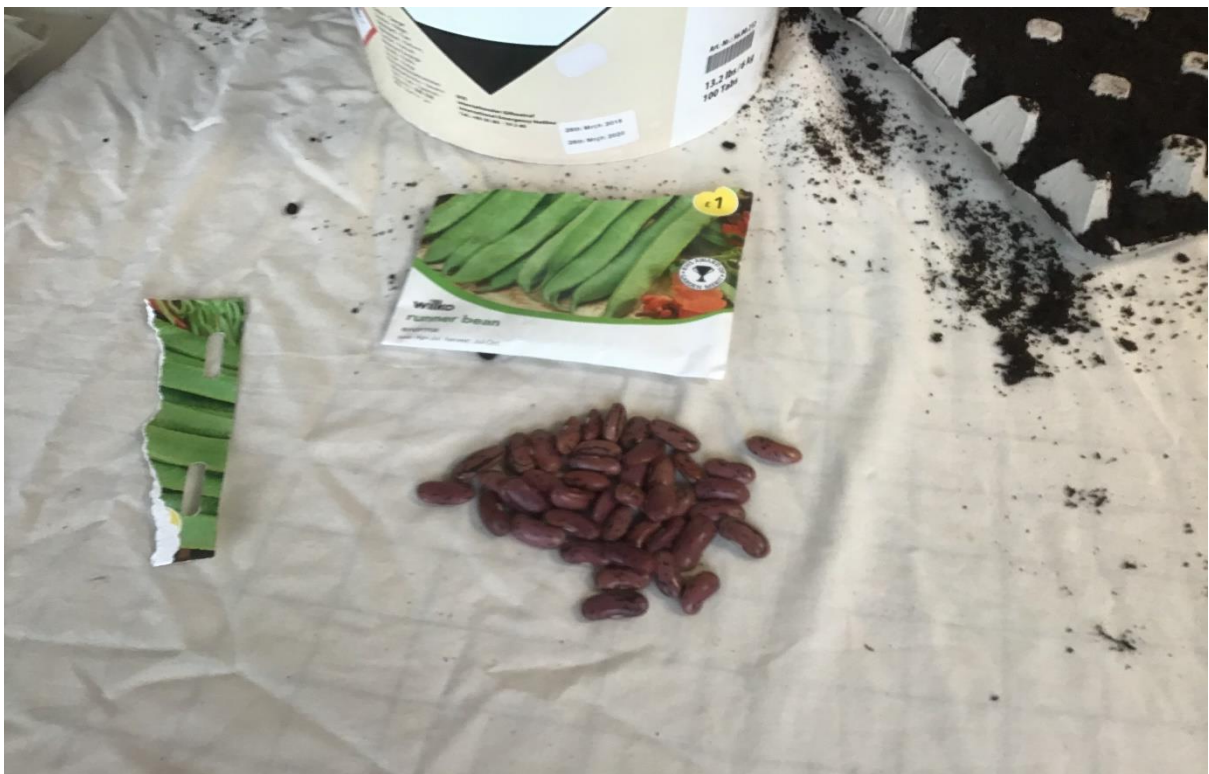

Here we have our trays, beans and compost ready to go!

Firstly, we took our yoghurt pots and each of us put some compost into the trays. We then gently patted the compost in so that every part of the tray was $\frac{3}{4}$ full so that the bean roots will have enough room to grow.

Here we are filling the trays!

We then took our bean seeds, (making sure that they were the right way up) and one by one we pressed them into the compost.

We then put more compost on our bean seeds (making sure they were completely covered.) With another gentle pat our seeds were sown and ready to be watered.

We then put them in our greenhouse. Hopefully they will start to grow very soon, so that we can record their progress on our growth charts!
